Grave Danger

There is grave danger, on the other hand, that in the melee some innocent employers, especially in smaller businesses, will suffer. Take, for instance, the business man in a certain segment of the steel industry who writes this correspondent:

"The unions, variously, are demanding 30 per cent increase in pay or $2 per day or 25 cents an hour. Such an advance in wage rates would increase our annual outlay for wages approximately $985,000. If half the wage increase were granted now, it would result in an outlay of $492,500.

"On the basis of annual sales of $7,500,000, a seven and one half per cent increase in price would yield $562,500. Deduct, if you please, the increased wage bill of $492,500 nd from the $562,500 increase in sales price and you have a gain of $70,-

"The gain does not allow anything for increases in cost of raw ly and other materials, services, etc. Other companies from whom we buy, increasing their wage rates

Munich Repairing War Damage

MUNICH, Dec. 13-People in this city which Hitler designated as the "capital of the Nazi movement" today seem more concerned with winterizing their bombed homes than in developing a new political Wooden hutments are springing up to form new shopping centers.

In some places you see priests with cassocks tucked up working as carpenters to patch their damaged churches.

Before the war Munich had three hundred hotels with eight thousand beds. Now there are only forty-two with five hundred beds and many of those are requisitioned. Work is now being rushed on others.

Meanwhile, officially permitted democratic parties appear to be getting few recruits.

Some Bavarians told me "I never want to vote again. In 1933 I was a communist. Hitler came and I lost my job. This year I lost my job again for being Nazi. If I join another party now I may get fired again in 1960."
